

RUDOLPH AND MARIE.

The Sunday Examiner devotes two pages to the tragic deaths of Prince Rudolph of Austria and Baroness Vetsera, claiming the true story telegraphed from London.

The Boston Advertiser prints a story, alleged to be authentic, of the way the pair met their deaths. It declares the Prince shot the Baroness in the presence of Count Waldstein, the affianced husband, and others in a drunken brawl in the palace. Waldstein brained the Prince with a heavy chair, and the other guests instantly killed Waldstein. This publication is evidently intended to forestall the world, which has widely advertised it would print simultaneously with the London Times, the first authentic story.

The latest revelation of this highly sensational romance of royalty is that the mistress of Rudolph was his own sister, and when he learned the terrible secret from the Emperor's lips he probably communicated the fact to Marie and they died together. This is stranger than most fiction, but a similar occurrence took place years ago in Paris. A young man of wealth started to find a lost sister, whom the family had mourned for years.

In Paris he met a beautiful woman and spent the night with her. In the morning he saw a scar on her arm which revealed the identity of his lost sister.

Without waking her he sprang through an open window and was dashed to pieces.

A magnificent picture was exhibited in Paris by a leading artist illustrating the incident.

Organized Chinese

The Oakland Enquirer has the following:

After all the talk that they would not do so, the vineyardists of Fresno have fallen back on Chinese labor for picking the grapes, and the reason for doing so is a peculiar one. It has been the habit of the vineyardists to make a contract with some single person for, twenty, fifty, a hundred or whatever number of Chinese might be necessary, and when the time came for picking the laborers would be ready without more trouble to the vineyard owner. But no such facilities exist for contracting for white labor, and rather than look up fifty different persons and contract with each singly, which could not be done except at the cost of much time and annoyance, the raisin growers prefer to re-employ the Chinese and pay their own prices. Before next season the white labor should be sufficiently organized to avoid this result occurring again.

A rascal by the name of Kelly has turned up in California who took a big slice out of a widow's claim to engineer it through the Legislature. The claim was legitimate and needed no engineering, but he threatened to beat it if she did not sign a paper, and she did so because her children were on the verge of starving. This scoundrel ought to be tied to a post where every man in California could take a kick at him. They tell of a man in Spain so despaired that beggars refused alms from him. He must have been some relative of Kelly.

One day last week Miss Mamie Saul was offered a wager by some men that she could not run from Sutro to Dayton in 30 minutes. The stake was $50 and she accepted it. She made the distance, three miles, in less than 24 minutes, and was none the worse for it. She is but sixteen years of age, and shows to the world the sort of bone and muscle produced by the invigorating climate of Nevada.

The Sacramento News says: "Bledsoe was one of the few honest men in the Legislature, but he will never get there again. The people never reward honest public men. It was always thus with public servants."
